Q&A

What is Pharmacogenomics testing?

Our genetic profile makes each one of us unique. Just as two individuals may have different eye and hair colors, these two same people may have a different reaction to the same dose of a prescribed medication. This genetic test will analyze how your body metabolizes certain drugs.

In what ways can my doctor use this testing to help my treatment?

This test will allow your doctor to choose the proper medication and dosage to avoid severe adverse drug reactions. Further, your doctor can have a better understanding of how your body metabolizes certain drugs and therefore, your doctor can adjust the dose to make the medication more effective and reduce side effects.

How is this test performed?

This is a quick 5 minute test that requires a painless buccal swab.

When will I get the results?

A report will be generated and forwarded to your ordering physician's office within 7-10 business days.

How much does it cost?

Pharmacogenomics testing is covered by most private insurance plans.
